Elijah Wallbridge, a Loyalist from Vermont, was the first settler in the extreme eastern part of the township. He drew and also purchased large tracts of land at Mississauga Point where, still to this day, land is in the possession of his descendants. Solomon Huff, also an United Empire Loyalist, settled on the only island in Ameliasburgh, Huff's Island, about 1825.

Other early settlers were: Elias Alley, John Bleeker, John Babcock, William Anderson, the Ways, Mordens, Redners, DeLongs, Roblins, Parliaments, Spragues, Bonters, Sagers, Pecks, Onderdonks, Philip Pember, Jacob Wormley, Henry Brout, Asa Richardson, Bolton Evans, and Zenas Ross.

Sidney

The eighth township, Sidney, was named after Lord Sidney who, at the time of the Revolutionary War, was Colonial Secretary. It was surveyed and laid out around 1787 by Louis Kotte, assisted by a Mr. McDonald.

Settlement was not instantaneous as it had been in townships one to five. Sidney was settled mainly by individuals who may be divided into several groups. First, there were the United Empire Loyalists; secondly, the sons and daughters

The material development of York between 1797 and 1803 was very gradual, but many events are of interest for they form the very foundation stones of a great city. "Our Town of York", as the governors called it in their proclamations, remained a very small settlement for a quarter of a century. Officials, merchants and tradesmen gradually occupied the original townsite and spread westward along the shore towards the Garrison, but at no point did the straggling town extend northward more than a few hundred feet. Dr. Scadding describes the course of development as commencing at the government buildings, "the Westminster of the New Capital", and spreading along its "Strand" towards the fort: "Growing slowly westward it developed, in the customary American way, its hotel, its tavern, boarding-house, wagon factory, tinsmith shop, bakery, general store, its lawyer's office, printing office and places of worship."

The mud and the numerous stumps in the streets, added greatly to difficulties of transport. One man wrote to the Niagara Canada Constellation in 1799 that "if any gentleman will come forward and pledge his honour (he being perfectly sober at the time) that he will introduce a bill in the House of Assembly for the purpose of a Stump Act for the city of York he shall have my vote at the ensuing general election". This type of law appears to have been effective in Vergennes, Vermont, where each drunk was forced to remove one stump from the streets. In the following year a Stump Act was in force in York, and many a root was removed by topers, who might be sentenced to eradicate one or more stumps from the highways of the town.

The inconvenience of having to reach Yonge Street by following a trail along Parliament Street led to the reopening of that part of Yonge from Lot (Queen) Street to the three-mile post. The York Gazette of December 20, 1800, gives an account of a meeting held to consider the matter:

"A number of the principal inhabitants of the town met together in one of the Government Buildings to consider

NORTHERN ONTARIO

Scenic highways designated with black dots on this map have been selected by AAA Road Reporters for their unusual interest.

RELATIVELY FEW experience the real north of Ontario, for roads do not penetrate far into this vast expanse of wet subarctic terrain and motorists must be content with only its southern fringes. This leaves about half of Ontario's total area almost as untouched as it was when the first trading posts were established during the late 18th century.

Geophysically, however, northern Ontario begins as far south as the Severn River, which empties into Georgian Bay near Midland. The demarcation line is clear: the rich, level fields of the developed south halt abruptly and give way to the lake-strewn forest of the Canadian Shield, which thins gradually as it approaches Hudson Bay and the tree line. Some of the world's oldest rocks compose the shield; they were formed before life itself appeared on earth.

In proportion to the scarcity of population is the abundance of wildlife. This unspoiled wilderness harbors moose, deer, bear and beaver; geese, ducks and partridge are the common game birds. Muskellunge, pike, pickerel, bass and trout lurk in the myriad lakes and streams.

Northern Ontario yields 30 percent of Canada's total mineral output. Gold from the region surrounding Kirkland Lake, Timmins and Porcupine, and nickel and copper from around Sudbury are the most important. Iron ore, uranium and silver are also mined.

The metropolis of northern Ontario is Thunder Bay, at the head of navigation on Lake Superior; at the opposite end of the lake is Sault Ste. Marie. Other important industrial cities are Sudbury and North Bay. Kenora is the main resort and outfitting center on Lake of the Woods.

The largest of the easily accessible parks in northern Ontario are Quetico, south of Atikokan, and Lake Superior Provincial Park, south of Wawa on the eastern shore of Lake Superior.

Two branches of the Trans-Canada Highway tie the region together. The Voyageur Route follows Highway 17 from Sudbury westward to Sault Ste. Marie, where it veers north through Lake Superior Provincial Park. Except for between Wawa and Heron Bay, it traces Superior's shoreline, ending at Thunder Bay. The Frontier Route (Highway 11) runs from North Bay past Kirkland Lake, then curves northwest through Kapuskasing. At Lake Nipigon, it turns south to join the Voyageur Route at Nipigon.

O

Scenic highways designated with black dots on this map have been selected by AAA Road Reporters for their unusual interest.

INLAND yet waterbound, Ontario stretches 1,600 kilometers in both length and breadth. The second largest of the Canadian provinces extends from the uncluttered shores of Hudson Bay to the edges of Lakes Superior, Huron, Erie and Ontario, from the boundary of Québec on the east to the Manitoba border on the west. Within these limits—in fact, on less than 10 percent of its land—one-third of Canada's total population produces half the nation's output of agricultural and manufactured goods. The 10 percent involved in this phenomenal productivity is the south, especially the southeastern peninsula between Lakes Ontario, Erie and Huron. Easy transportation afforded by the lakes and access to world markets made possible by the St. Lawrence Seaway have turned this mid-continental region into a major force in global commerce.

Toronto, capital of the province, is one of the most stimulating, modern and vibrant cities in North America. The largest English-speaking city in Canada, Toronto is also a financial, industrial and cultural center. The quality and variety of its cultural activities match any in the world. Gleaming towers of glass and steel adjoin fussy remnants of the Victorian era; the serenity of 19th-century mansions sitting like dowagers on properly groomed grounds contrasts with the upbeat, Greenwich Village atmosphere of the Yorkville district.

Ottawa, the national capital, is just as cosmopolitan but more serious in mien. The dignity of government pervades its architecture; many of the national treasures reside in the National Museum of Science and Technology, the National Aviation Museum, National Gallery of Canada and numerous other museums. Yet another dimension is revealed in late May, when the tulips for which the city is famous burst into riotous bloom.

Southern Ontario, however, has more than teeming cities, round-the-clock industry and commerce. It also has natural beauty. Niagara Falls, although hemmed in by parks and attractions on both sides of the river, remains amazing. The Thousand Islands in the St. Lawrence River, which lure tens of thousands of visitors each year, also compose one of the six national parks in Ontario. The others are Point Pelee, southeast of Windsor and the southernmost mainland point in Canada; Pukaskwa, on Lake Superior; Georgian Bay Islands National Park; Bruce Peninsula National Park; and Fathom Five National Marine Park. The latter is Canada's first national marine park and includes 19 islands and numerous shipwrecks off the tip of the Bruce Peninsula.

Of Ontario's numerous provincial parks, the biggest by far is Algonquin, 765,345 hectares of lake-strewn woodland between Huntsville and Pembroke. Other popular vacation centers are Manitoulin Island, in Lake Huron, and the Kawartha Lakes, Muskoka Lakes and Lake of Bays regions. With an area of approximately 276,612 hectares, Manitoulin is one of the world's largest islands completely surrounded by fresh water. It is reached by ferry from Tobermory or by highway from Little Current.

In all these areas, pike, bass, trout and muskellunge attract fishermen by the thousands from near and far. Fishing camps and summer resorts are numerous; cross-country skiing and snowmobiling provide sport for the hardy during the cold winter months.
